

My Customized Cover Letter

When you apply online or initiate contact with potential employers through cold emails, your ability to draft a crisp and engaging cover letter comes in handy. While your resume informs your reader about your career history and specific results you delivered, a cover letter aims to persuade and relate.

Check if you have done the following in your letter:

- I read the job description carefully, understood all the requirements, and identified the top 3-4 requirements to address in my cover letter.
If the job requirements look self-evident to you, think again about the order in which they appear in the job description and how they are phrased by this particular organization. Address the most significant requirements first.

- I have an opening paragraph to answer Why Company XYZ?
- I used the structure of the job description to guide my letter.
- In the body of the letter, I focused on the top requirements (2 to 4) from the job description.
- I used the exact keywords from the job description as paragraph openers for my letter.
- I addressed each of the top requirements (2 to 4) with specific examples.
- All paragraphs in my letter are of equal length for readability (4-6 lines each).
- I added a few numbers to illustrate my measurable results.

For example: "In the past 6 years with my latest employer, I completed 1,200 orders and achieved 0% late status on deadlines ranging from 4 hours to 3 business days."

- I have drafted a follow-up email with initial ideas to stand out among the competition:
 - express my continued interest and availability to interview
 - offer my References Sheet
 - add one piece of information I learned about the company recently (from their news, latest projects, publications, etc.) and how my experience is a match.
